I woke up and rubbed the sleep out of my eyes. Today's the ~~the~~ day when we would go to Disney Land. I slowly get out of bed and get dressed. I follow the wonderful rich scent of brown sizzling bacon, eggs, and golden hashbrowns. I quickly gobble it all up. The air seemed to be filled with excitement. Next thing I know we're at the airport checking out our luggage. We walk down the musty corridor and on to the plane. I nervously look out the window as the plane takes off. My stomach lurches into my throat like a frog that's trying to get out. My eyes flutter shut as the plane flies through the atmosphere.

I woke up to the sound of my mom's canary like voice ringing through my head. ~~We're here~~ we're here she said happily. I jumped up grabbed my bag and ran off the plane. I pressed my face to the cool airport window. I saw beautiful green lucious palm trees swaying and other silver airplanes glistening in the sunlight. We went to our hotel, stuffed ourselves with dinner, then headed off to bed.

I woke up as sunlight filtered into the room. My family and I went downstairs into the lobby to eat breakfast. ~~which consist~~ After we had breakfast we jumped into the car and speedily went to Disney Land. We started out with calm rides such as see and feel movie and a helicopter ride. Then my dad and I went on the Indiana Jones (my favorite one) while my mom and brother went to a baby ride close by. After more and more rides we went to go eat dinner.

Night started to fall and there was this one ride that my dad and I really wanted to go on. It was some type of train ride that was really really scary. I remember as we started climbing up and up and up I yelled to my dad that I didn't have a good feeling about it. He agreed. Then 5 seconds later we dropped down the hill exceedingly fast. I kept yelling I'm going to throw up I'm going to throw up. Then it came to an abrupt stop and we got off. Well that was enough excitement for me!! Oh and I didn't throw up!!
